The structure and governance of the General Assembly

LAWS of North Carolina, known as statutes, are made by the General Assembly which is elected in even-numbered years at the November general election. Legislators serve for two-year terms.

The North Carolina General Assembly is made up of two bodies or houses; the Senate, which has 50 members; and the House of Representatives, which consists of 120 members.

Each legislator represents either a Senatorial District or a House District, and the Legislature is required by the Constitution of North Carolina to change these districts after every ten-year census to assure that all legislators represent approximately equal numbers of people. All legislators must be residents of the district which they represent.

The General Assembly meets in regular session usually beginning on the third Wednesday following the second Monday in January of each odd-numbered year. Since 1973 the General Assembly has met for 5 to 7 months in the odd-numbered year and has adjourned to reconvene the following even-numbered year for a shorter session.

The Senate and the House of Representatives meet in their respective chambers on Monday evenings; in the middle of the day (usually at 1:30) on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Members return to their homes to take care of personal business and be available to their constituents during the weekend. During the week, committee meetings are held in the morning and late afternoon. A great deal of the legislative work is done in the committee meetings. The House of Representatives is presided over by a Speaker, elected from its membership. The presiding officer of the Senate (called the President of the Senate) is the Lieutenant Governor of the State.

He has no vote in the Senate except to break a tie.

The Senate and House also elect other officers from their respective memberships including a President Pro Tempore in the Senate and a Speaker Pro Tempore in the House. At the beginning of each session, the President Pro Tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives appoint members to serve on the standing committees of each body.

The Senate currently has 23 committees or subcommittees. The House has 51. The work of the committees is very important, as every bill introduced will be studied by at least one committee in the Senate and in the House of Representatives.

Each house elects a Principal Clerk who is responsible for keeping the necessary records of the house. Each also elects a Sergeant at Arms, who serves as "police officer" for his or her house and whose assistants act as doorkeepers while the body and its committees are meeting.

A third officer is the Reading Clerk who reads all documents or parts thereof which the rules or the presiding officer require to be read during the daily session.

The Legislative Services Commission, consisting of seven members of each house, is the management authority for the General Assembly.

The Commission, through its Legislative Services Officer and staff, provides the following services to the legislature: bill drafting, legal assistance, fiscal analysis, general research and library services, administration of the legislature's budget, clerical assistance, computer services, proofreading, printing, supply, food service, and building maintenance and security.

How laws are enacted by the legislature

● Drafting of Bills

A bill is a proposed law. It may be drafted by any competent person. The Legislative Services Commission's Bill Drafting Division drafts bills at the request of the members of the General Assembly. The Office of the Attorney General has the statutory duty to draft bills for the State departments and agencies generally, including the General Assembly. Thus, legislators have two separate offices to which they may turn for drafts of bills.

● Introduction of Bills

Only a member of the General Assembly may introduce a bill - that is, present it to the General Assembly for its consideration - and he or she is called the bill's introducer or sponsor.

At the proper time during each daily session, the presiding officer (called the Chair) announces "Introduction of Bills and Resolutions." A member wishing to introduce a bill has already filed the bill with the Principal Clerk. It is received by the Reading Clerk who assigns a number to it and then reads aloud the name of the introducer, the bill number, and the bill title. At this point the bill is said to have passed its first reading.

● Reference to Committee

Normally, as soon as a bill is introduced, the President Pro Tempore for Senate bills and the Speaker of the House of Representatives for House bills name a committee to which the bill will be assigned for careful study and recommendation. If the committee approves the bill, it reports this fact and the bill is placed on the calendar - the daily schedule of business - for consideration by the full membership of the body. Amendments may be recommended by the committee or may be proposed by any member from the floor.

● Consideration by First House

When the time comes for a consideration of the bill by the full membership of the house (Senate or House of Representatives), the Chair will recognize the chair of the committee which recommended the bill for passage or the bill's original introducer. This chair, or a member designated by the chair, will explain the bill, and then any member who wishes to speak for or against the bill will be heard. Sometimes there is lengthy and heated debate; sometimes there is virtually no debate at all. After all who wish to be heard have spoken, a vote is taken. If the vote is favorable, the bill is said to have passed its second reading and moves to its third and final reading, at which time there may be more debate.

● Consideration by Second House

After a bill has passed its third reading in the house in which it was introduced, it is sent to the other house, where it goes through the same process as in the first house - that is, it is referred to committee, and if approved, is debated and voted on at the second and third readings on the floor.

● Concurrence in Amendments

It often happens that the second house will make changes in a bill which was passed by the house in which the bill originated. In such cases the bill must be returned to the house of origin with a request that that body concur in the changes. If the original house does concur, the bill is ready to be enrolled and signed into law.

If the original house objects to the amendments adopted in the other house, the two presiding officers appoint members to a conference committee which seeks to reconcile the differences between the two houses. If the committee can agree upon the disputed subject, the committee reports to each house, and the two houses vote on the recommended text. If either house rejects the conference committee's recommendation, the bill is defeated.

● Enrollment, Ratification, and Publication

After a bill passes both houses, it is enrolled, that is, a clean copy, including all amendments, is prepared, with space for the signatures of the two presiding officers, and the governor, if necessary.

The enrolled copy is taken to each presiding officer during the daily session. Each officer signs the enrolled copy. When the second signature is affixed, the bill is said to have been ratified. If the bill is a local law, it will become law.

In November 1996, the citizens of North Carolina voted to amend the State Constitution to allow for a gubernatorial veto. All Public Bills other than bills making appointments or revising districts are presented to the Governor on the day following ratification for the Governor's approval or veto. If the Governor signs the bill or takes no action on the bill within ten days after presentation, the bill becomes law. After adjournment of the General Assembly, the Governor has 30 days to act on a bill. The Governor is required to reconvene the General Assembly if the Governor vetoes a bill after adjournment unless the Governor receives a written request signed by a majority of the Members that it is not necessary to reconvene.

If the Governor vetoes a bill, the bill is returned to the original house where 3/5 of present and voting members can vote to override the veto. If the original house votes to override the veto, the bill is sent to the second house where 3/5 of present and voting members must also vote to override the veto before the bill can become law.

After it becomes law, the term "bill" is no longer used. The enrolled act or law is given a chapter number and is published under that number in a volume called "Session Laws of North Carolina."

How to get to the legislature, where to park, meet and eat

THE Legislative Building (LB) is located at 16 W. Jones St. in downtown Raleigh in the block bordered by Salisbury, Jones, Lane and Wilmington streets. The Legislative Office Building (LOB) is located next door at 300 N. Salisbury St.

The Legislative Building is free and open to the public year round; 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday; 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Saturday; and 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. Sunday.

The Legislative Building occupies a city block and houses the Senate and House of Representatives as well as members and staff offices and committee rooms. The Legislative Office Building houses committee rooms, members and staff offices, as well as offices of the Secretary of State and State Auditor.

Street parking is available around the Legislative Building, clearly marked and signed. Other nearby street parking is available; or you may use the parking deck accessed from Salisbury and McDowell streets which has spaces designated for persons with disabilities. There also is an underground parking deck beneath the N.C. Museum of History, with deck entrances on Wilmington and Jones streets.

All levels of the Legislative Building are served by elevators. A cafeteria open to the public is located in the basement. Benches/seats available for waiting or resting. There also is a snack bar on the first floor of the Legislative Office Building.
